Costly Errors Play Their Part in Reverse Sustained by Donovan's Men.

inning before they could put the winning run across.

The defeat was largely due to the wildness of Warhop, who gave six bases on balls. The little fellow was not hit hard, but he was continually in holes on account of his wildness. Mullen and Nunamaker made his task more difficult by contributing errors.

Mullen's error gave the Browns their first run. With one out, Austin singled to right. Howard grounded to Maisel, who got his man at first. Jimmy Austin took a chance, and endeavored to reach third on the out. His courage was rewarded, for the first baseman threw wildly to third in an effort to head him off, and home came Austin.

The Yankees tied the score in the second inning. Mullen made partial amends for his mistake by banging a clean single to left. Birdle Cree doubled to left and brought him home. Cree himself was caught off second and run down, from Agnew to Lavan to Austin.

In the third the Browns took the lead, and this time it was a two-run margin which they gained. Then the midget pitcher of the Yankees grew wild and passed first Austin and then Howard. This filled the bases. Pratt drove a hit to left, which scored Agnew and Austin, but he was out in trying to stretch the hit, from Hartzell to Boone.

The Yankees took away one of this lead in the fourth. Peckinpaugh walked and stole second. Mullen walked, and both runners moved up on a wild pitch. James also walked Cree, and then there was no more James. Rickey took him out and sent in Weilman.

Hartzell was out, from Lavan to Leary, and Peckinpaugh scored on the play, but Boone struck out. The visitors tied the score in the seventh. Cree walked, and Hartzell sent him to second with a single to left. Boone hit into a double play, from Lavan to Pratt to Leary, but Nunamaker's double brought Cree home.
